Challenges That Are Sore

Primarily I am addressing the teachers, but the same standards apply to the students while using language. The students should be careful while using language among their elders, their friends and their young brigade. I would like to use the phrase, “Fragile, Handle with CARE”.

Using Decent Language Matters When Communicating with Students

While interacting with the third year students and cajoling them to put forth their grievances, one very common and shocking grievance they came up with was the language some of the teachers use while addressing them. As teachers we play a decisive role while communicating with the students. The students expect the teachers to use decent language. Unfortunately, some teachers use rough, abusive and cuss language with the students which tarnishes the image of the teachers as a whole and also the institution. Use of decent language is essential for creating a positive, respectful and conducive learning environment in the college.

Why Decent Language Matters:

- Use of decent language with the students demonstrates respect for the feeling and dignity of the student. They appreciate and feel valued.
- The use of decent language helps to create a safe and supportive atmosphere and it also enhances the moral of the student who readily open-up to share their thoughts and ideas.
- Use of decent language binds a trustful teacher-student relationship, where the student becomes more open and honest.
- The students take the teachers as the role model and try to imbibe the qualities that the teacher displays, the language is the primary quality that is instantly audible.
- language reflects the culture and it sets the tone of welcoming if it is decent or otherwise.

Tips for Using Decent Language:

- Teachers need to be aware of the tone and inflection while speaking to students. Avoid being dismissive and critical.
- Be careful not to use language that is derogatory, discriminatory or hurtful.
- Teachers need to listen carefully to the concerns of the students and respond emphatically.
- Use language that transcends barriers by avoiding jargons and double meaning words.
- It is appreciable that in case a teacher uses language that is hurtful or offensive, promptly apologize sincerely.

By using decent language, we can create a positive and supportive learning environment that promotes respect, inclusivity, and open communication. Remember, the language we use has the power to shape our students' experiences and perceptions. Let's use this power wisely!
